In an exclusive interview with The Sunday Telegraph, Cardinal George Pell has spoken for the first time about his prison journal, a deeply personal account of his time behind bars.

Pell, who was wrongly convicted of child sexual abuse and spent 13 months in prison before his conviction was overturned, says that the journal was a way for him to process the trauma of his experience.

"I wrote it for myself, to help me make sense of what had happened to me," he says. "I never intended for it to be published, but I am now sharing it with the world in the hope that it will help others who have been through similar experiences."

The journal is a raw and unflinching account of Pell's time in prison. He describes the harsh conditions, the violence, and the loneliness. He also writes about the faith and hope that sustained him during his darkest days.

"I was innocent, and I knew that I would eventually be vindicated," he says. "But that didn't make it any easier to endure the injustice of my imprisonment."

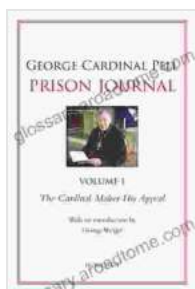

Pell's journal is a powerful indictment of the Australian justice system. It exposes the flaws in the system that allowed an innocent man to be convicted and imprisoned.

"I hope that my story will help to raise awareness of the miscarriage of justice that I suffered," he says. "I also hope that it will inspire others who have been through similar experiences to never give up hope."

Pell's prison journal is a must-read for anyone who is interested in the miscarriage of justice, the resilience of the human spirit, or the power of faith.
